Makry-Gialos and its surroundings

Makry-Gialos (= long beach) is located in the very southeast of Crete and is thus one of the southernmost places in Europe. Protected by the mountain range, the climate here is mild, especially in the winter months (own temperature measurements in December 2020-2022: air 15-23°C, sea 19-21°C).

Makrygialos is a village that lives all year round and where you can find everything your heart desires. Our local partners are concerned about the well-being of the guests. Public services (e.g. bus, waste collection) are well organised by Mediterranean standards.

Around Makrygialos there are endless olive groves and vegetable crops in greenhouses. The biodiversity is remarkable, especially appreciated by botanists (180 endemic plant species) and ornithologists (e.g. larks, Eleonora's falcon, vulture colonies). With a bit of luck, you might come across a sea turtle while snorkelling or diving.

In the neighbourhood of Makrygialos lies the picturesque mountain village of Pefki, also directly accessible on foot through the charming gorge. From there, an easy mountain hike leads to the Orthodox chapel of Stavromenos, with wonderful views and two accessible caves.

After a short drive to the east, you reach the Moni Kapsa monastery, where you will also find the entrance to the very exciting Perivolakia Gorge. About an hour's drive further east is the dream beach of Xerokampos, and a little further on the famous palm beach of Vai. Towards the west, just before the provincial town of Ierapetra, lies the popular Mylonas waterfall.
